ECONOMIC ENVIRONMENT

In the United States, economic figures were a little more mixed, such as the February employment report. Job creation remained solid, but the unemployment rate rose from 3,7% to 3,9%. Price indicators surprised on the upside. Headline inflation accelerated to +3,2% year-on-year in February, and core inflation slowed less than expected to +3,8% year-on-year. The Fed maintained its key rate at between 5,25% and 5,50%. FOMC members seemed fairly confident about the possibility of two or three rate cuts this year. In the Eurozone, the flash PMI surveys for March came as a positive surprise. The composite index rose from 49,2 to 49,9, moving closer to the 50 threshold that separates expansion and contraction in activity. February's inflation figures surprised on the upside, at +2,6% year-on-year for headline inflation and +3,1% excluding energy and food. The ECB left its key rates at current levels (4% for the deposit rate). Christine Lagarde suggested that a rate cut was possible in June provided that the slowdown in wages continued. In China, the annual meeting of parliament brought neither surprise nor massive stimulus. The growth target for this year was maintained at "around 5%". Activity data at the beginning of the year sent mixed signals. However, PMI surveys showed broadly stable growth in February. After falling for four consecutive months, consumer prices rose by 0,8% year-on-year, boosted by favourable base effects.
